

Hola México - Geography

Vocabulary	Definition
climate	The general pattern of the weather in a particular location over a period of time.
economic activity	Processes and decisions that involve money, for example
natural resource	Something useful that is found naturally in the environment satellite map	A map produced with images from satellites out in space settlement	An area where humans have made shelter to live - their home.
topography	The shape of a land surface
urban	Built-up areas such as towns and cities which are more densely populated.
urbanisation	The process by which settlements become more populated and developed.

What are the main geographical features of México?

México has a very diverse landscape, with deserts, mountains, beautiful coastline and tropical rainforests. We can observe these physical features using satellite maps.

What is the climate of México?

México has a varied climate, with dry, arid regions, cooler mountainous regions and tropical areas in the south. Precipitation varies too across the different parts of the country.

What is the geography of urban areas?

Urban areas in México have high populations, with varied demographics and nationalities. Land use is mainly for houses, shops and businesses. They have a wide variety of amenities and facilities that serve the people living there.

The effects of the process of urbanisation can be seen in Mexico City.

What settlement types are found in México?

pueblo

rainforest

city

